SHOULD HAVE THE RIGHT OF APPEAL

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18.—That the United States should have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as a matter of right, whenever a conviction is reversed on appeal by the defendant to a Circuit Court of Appeals, is the opinion expressed by Attorney-General Bonaparte in his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, submitted to Congress to-day.

In this connection he cites the case of the reversal of the fine of more than $25,000,000, in which an application for the allowance of a writ of certiorari had been made to the Supreme Court. He holds that the reversal of the present statute would be appropriate in the case of all criminal proceedings, but suggests that it would be especially so in connection with prosecutions where the wealth of the defendant usually renders an appeal on his or its part for its own sake a matter of course. The Attorney-General's opinion is that in such cases there is no question of double jeopardy, as the appeal of the defendant from the original conviction is recognized by the undoubted weight of well-considered judicial authority as a waiver of his rights in the respect, and as in the absence of some provision of law as the Attorney-General recommends guilty parties may escape from just punishment under the law as finally determined by the court of last resort.

The Policy of the Department.

He declares that the consistent policy of the Department of Justice during the year in enforcing the statutes intended to protect the interstate and foreign commerce of the country from evil arising through combinations in restraint of trade and attempts to create monopoly, as well as discriminations and other illegal practices, on the part of common carriers engaged in such commerce, has been carefully to investigate all complaints submitted to it, whether by public authorities or by responsible private citizens, and to authorize proceedings, whether civil or criminal, only when this investigation has shown the complaints to be serious and well founded, and that such action might be reasonably expected. He reports that this policy has been followed during the year by a fair measure of success in the proceedings authorized, and that as a consequence decisions already obtained or expected under the statutes dealing with such cases will soon be interpreted so authoritatively that those seeking to comply with the law will be relieved from all uncertainty as to what the law really is. He says that serious obstacles have been encountered in enforcing the statutes, and that these may be with advantage readily removed by further legislation.

"The United States has had occasion of late years, and will probably have occasion in future," he declared, "to prosecute criminals, corporations or other artificial persons. As such offenders cannot be physically arrested, it is obviously desired that a simple and convenient form of process shall be prescribed by law to have the effect of an actual arrest and removal to the trial district in the case of a natural person."
